

Today's tech-savvy customers don't respond well to one-dimensional experiences.

They use more digital devices more frequently than ever. They know how to navigate a complex array of channels on their brand journeys. They not only expect better digital experiences, they deserve them.

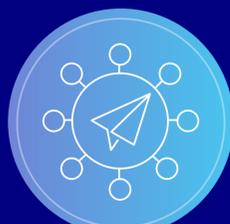

3 OUT OF 4

consumers use more than one channel to shop. The more channels they use, the more loyal they become.

Modern marketers know that future growth will come from multichannel or omnichannel marketing. Many struggle with which one to choose. Others don't understand the difference.

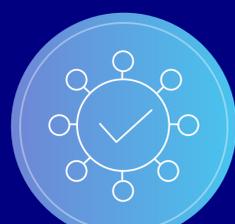

What is multichannel marketing?

Marketers use multiple channels to communicate with audiences without necessarily unifying their journeys across multiple touch points.

What is omnichannel marketing?

Omnichannel marketers focus on unifying data and technology across all touch points—regardless of channel—to deliver seamless customer engagement.

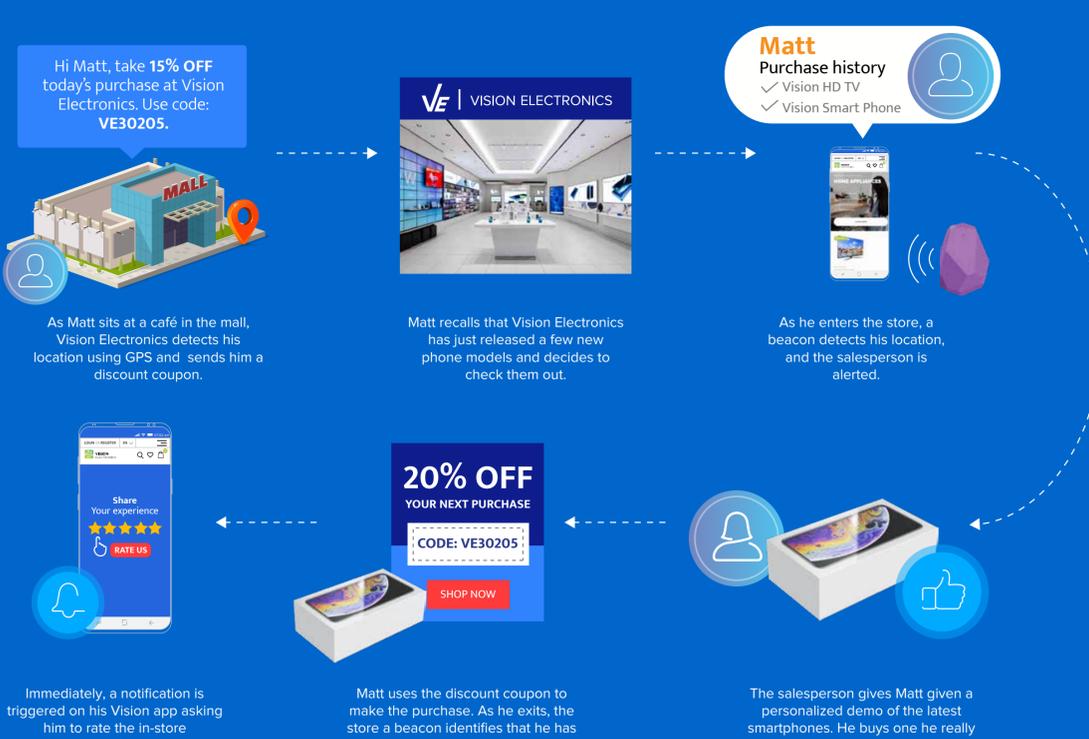

Know the differences.
